

Message to the UNB community regarding coronavirus

For many in our community, these past few weeks have been ones of uncertainty and concern as 2019-nCoV, more commonly known as novel coronavirus, has received increasing attention. I know that for members of our community, those countries most affected are home, and it must be tremendously difficult to watch the news and worry about friends and loved ones from afar.

UNB offers its full support to anyone who may be concerned about the disease or who have family, friends or colleagues who may be affected. Health and counselling services, as well as our international student advisor offices, are available on both campuses for support for those who wish to use them.

Counselling Services:	Fredericton (506) 453-4820 Saint John (506) 648-5501
Employee Assistance Program:	1-866-885-6540

International Student Services:	International Student Services – Saint John International Student Advisor's Office Fredericton

While the risk of infection in Canada is low, and Public Health has not advised UNB that any member of the UNB community is at risk or has been diagnosed, we do recognize the serious nature of the outbreak and the difficulties many of our community members may face.

We are committed to keeping our community informed, and we've been working closely with provincial public health authorities. Regular updates have been posted to the Student Health Centres websites.

Sincerely,

Dr. Paul J. Mazerolle
